KEYMACRO for Windows is a simple, GUI based macro recorder that allows users to record keyboard presses with a simple click. The program is completely free, but comes with a small, short disclaimer. With the release of the new 1.8 version users are now able to create and run macros that record multiple keyboard presses, which is a huge benefit to users. For example, a person could run a macro that starts the program, logs in, does some work, and then logs off. Another macro could start up the program, do some work, and then save the data to a file or something. Many other possibilities exist for users to create macros of their own. The one short limitation to the program is the necessity of requiring a user to manually activate a hotkey that will launch the macro recorder. Once this is setup, the hotkey is saved and stored on the clipboard, which makes it incredibly easy for users to run a macro, simply by clicking on the hotkey on the desktop. The hotkey can be changed from the options menu, and it's location is saved in the registry. The only other limitation of the software is the necessity to run it every time you start your computer. This is because the hotkey we use is created from the first keyboard entry after you log into Windows. What's New in v1.8.1: KeyMacro 1.8 has been completely rewritten in the latest C++ programming language. This provides better code execution, greater compatibility, and better application compatibility, as well as overall bug fixes.
