The amount and variety of private charters can vary by states and may need to be applied for through the State Department of Education. These charter schools operate independently and should be admitted directly into an applicant's district, and are funded by local, federal, state, and/or private sources. The public charter school system is a hallmark of Arizona's educational successes. Increasingly, private schools have sought and benefited from this model. In fact, many private schools did not exist prior to the 1990s. As a result of the expansion of schools serving students with diverse needs, the Arizona Department of Education has never conducted a data-driven study of its private school enrollment. In 2002, this changed when the Arizona Department of Education required each charter school to collect enrollment data for the first time. The results showed that charter schools enrolled a higher percentage of economically disadvantaged students than their traditional public school counterparts. The numbers of charter schools in Arizona increased from 208 in 2001 to 1,211 in 2004 (Arizona Department of Education, n.d.a). The ultimate control is for you to provide your feedback to the students. But, let's be honest, with the current state of the world, it will take a lot of work to make sure your class has the best experience possible. Let's cover some steps you can take to do just that, and maximize your engagement level at the same time. As another tool to help your online instructors in their journey toward more relaxed, less controlling teaching techniques is a video review system. With real-time video review, students will see and hear events in the lesson captured by the instructor. This will allow the student to see for themselves that they experienced the lesson correctly. Real-time video review will not only improve student attendance, but it will also reduce student anxiety and fear of retribution for a mistake. The video review system can be used to promote group work, play a "gotcha" game, or a scavenger hunt, or even for a reflection section. Students will be able to engage in the lesson, as well as in the reflective process.

Instructional strategies vary widely and are informed by a multitude of factors, including feedback, anxiety, motivation, discipline, and individual learning preferences (Leineweber & Heintzelman, 2009). Many instructional strategies center on expert-led instruction, where students watch and repeat exact procedures or observe demonstrations. Disadvantages of this approach include that it may be impersonal and difficult to implement, especially in an asynchronous environment. To allow for a more personalized learning experience, experts can use multimedia to demonstrate tasks or procedures to a student in an interactive way (Cabrera et al., 2014). Most COVID-19-related deaths have occurred in the US over the past 30 days. However, the pandemic appears to have intensified in the Midwest, with the number of cases in Illinois nearly doubling in the last week of February (https://gis.illinois.gov/disease/covid-19-county-data). As of February 26, 2020, in Illinois there were 3,865 cases of COVID-19 with 291 deaths. As a percentage of the population, Illinois and Michigan have the highest and lowest percentage of COVID-19 cases in the US, respectively (N.I.H., 2020). Primary diagnosis data collected by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) indicates that over 70% of the Illinois cases reported to CDC have been diagnosed in Cook and Kane Counties (N.I.H., 2020). In response to the new COVID-19 outbreak, the Illinois State Board of Education (ISBE) approved a revised instructional format, introducing distance education over the summer of 2020. This system is now operational and offers three types of distance learning modalities. At the time of this article was published, ISBE has not outlined a plan for how school will be held back or reopened next year. However, with both Cook and Kane Counties and many other large school districts opening up distance learning, the need to reopen schools in the state is going to become increasingly urgent. 5ec8ef588b
